This research was aimed to study dual system implementation according to opinions of administrators, managers of service places, and instructors of Northeastern vocational institutions, region II. In so doing, three areas were studied: the curriculum ; instructional management and evaluation; and personnel preparation and development. Research sample were 75 administrators, 40 managers, and 48 instructors, totalling 163 persons. Research instrument was the researcher-made 5 levels-rating scale questionnaire having 50 items. The reliability power was 0.96. Statistics computing was done by using SPSS for windows to find out frequency, percentage, mean, standard deviation, and f-test.

Research findings were as follows:

Administrators, managers, and instructors of Northeastern Vocational institutions, region II perceived. at the “moderate” level as a whole in three areas : the curriculum, instructional management and evaluation, and personnel preparation and development. When considering each area, it was found that the mean at the “much” level revealed in two areas : personnel preparation and development and instructional management and evaluation. The curriculum implementation was found at the “moderate” level. When studying the present roles and duties, it was found that the administrators and managers perceived the implementation at the “much” level in two areas : personnel preparation and development, and instructional management and evaluation. The curriculum was done at the “moderate” level. When considering the roles and duties at present, it was found that the administrators perceived the implementation as a whole in three areas was at the “much” level. But the managers and instructors saw that was at the “moderate” level. When comparing opinions between those of administrators and instructors, it was different at the 0.05 statistical significance. The rest revealed that the administrators managers, and instructors perceived Towards the implementation differently in the curriculum at the “moderate” level while the personel Preparation and development at the “much” level.

As for the curriculum the administrators had implemented at the “much” level. But the managers and instructors perceived at the “moderate” level.
